

Acorn Weekly

April 11, 2024

We've been planning and preparing our garden space. The children flipped through catalogues and books to create a picture list of things we would like to grow in our garden. Next, we planted seeds during science last week. This week we already observed a few sprouts!

With dryer weather, the children have been able to revisit some of their favorite activities with a new Spring maturity. They are creating cities, with adjoining rural areas, big a small cardboard creations, and getting creative with collage, wire, and beads! I love watching the space grow with the children!

When the cold rains returned last week, we tried to spark a little excitement rather than grumble- drips and splash art got us excited to experiment and explore WITH the rain. Much of it washed away, but the “rivers” and other designs we cool to watch.

Some math play- sorting, counting, patterns and creating games.

We started our Eric Carle art pieces today. After reading many of his books, it was time to play with his style of illustration. The children chose an animal to create from our lists of favorites or new ones from the books. Today we started the Koala, Cheetah, and Snake.

There was lots of interest in this large art, more than at the beginning of the year, so we will keep on going next week with the other chosen animals!
